

Our Philosophy

At Allstar Rock Academy, we believe in the power of music to truly transform lives for the better. For children, music can act as conduit through which they can discover more about themselves and the world around them. By creating music in a band setting, we're compelled to see ourselves as a crucial part of a team – and if that team works together, it can create something that sounds amazing.

Our founding principle is to bring the creativity and collaboration of music making to a classroom setting, whilst working with each of our Allstar Rock Academy students to help them achieve their individual goals.

Accessibility & Inclusion

For some people, learning a musical instrument can feel completely out of reach - or even impossible. At Allstar Rock Academy, we're determined to make music accessible for all. By rethinking traditional learning practices and payment structures, we're able to extend the possibility of learning and experiencing music to more children than ever before.

The conventional practice of one-to-one peripatetic music tuition can feel impenetrable for some children, and overly expensive for parents. We teach popular songs that children know and love in a group setting, cultivating a safe space where they can feel free to express themselves. This can create a bond with music that lasts way beyond the end of an Allstar Rock Academy session.

A group learning structure means we can make our sessions much more affordable than traditional one-to-one music lessons. What's more, we provide all the instruments needed to run each session, so children can try things out and find their passion before parents make a significant investment.

We're so committed to keeping our sessions open and available to all, we even offer a number of free spaces to each school – to be offered to pupils at the school's discretion.

Skills that transcend the practice room

We believe that the skills cultivated in our sessions transfer directly into academic learning. Playing in a band compels us to challenge ourselves and develops listening skills, communication and concentration.

Every child is different. Some of us have no trouble accessing our own confidence, and some of us find it a little more difficult to believe in ourselves. At its best, music can inspire us to find our inner voice – whether we yearn for the limelight or prefer a seat towards the back of the room. By creating and performing together, Allstar Rock Academy students learn that everybody's contribution is equally as crucial to ensuring a great result.

Safeguarding

Every Allstar Rock Academy session should be a positive, inspiring experience for every child involved. For this reason, all our expert tutors receive child safeguarding and first aid training before they enter the classroom. All our tutors are also DBS checked in line with school policies.
